

Australian Center for the Moving Image

Fed Square
Melbourne, VIC 3006
Australia

Phone: 61 3 8663 2200

Museum in Melbourne, VICACMI is Australia's national museum of film, TV, video games, digital culture, and art – at the heart of Melbourne in Fed Square. Our museum is home to Australia's premier moving image collection, spanning screen culture history and available to discover at our Australian Mediatheque. Visitors can explore our free, interactive Screen Worlds exhibition and an ever-changing program of world class exhibitions, including many Australian exclusives. Along with a packed calendar of talks and performances, workshops and school holiday programs, there's always something new to see or do at ACMI. All year round ACMI screens quality contemporary and classic films in our state-of-the-art cinemas. Grab a glass of wine or some cinema snacks from our Café & Bar, and head upstairs for the best independent Australian and international films for adults and families. Our mission is to enrich our lives and foster our creative industries by illuminating the moving images and technologies that define our age. We want to be the leading global museum of the moving image – across art, film & TV, games, digital culture and emerging forms. We aim to connect makers, thinkers, viewers, and players in a vibrant space - both physical and digital - that embraces the future, understands the past and unlocks new types of creativity. We strive to enable dynamic access to our collections, resources, and stories, fostering participation and collaboration for the creative industries and the public at large. We work to empower our community to become creative and critical consumers and producers of the moving image.

Visit Website
Send Message
Email Friend

