Restaurant in Sydney, NSW Mamak is an award-winning Malaysian restaurant, with branches in Sydney and Melbourne. Named after the roadside stalls of Kuala Lumpur that peddle Indian Malay street food, Mamak is renown for authentic, bold and traditional flavors, with smart and friendly service. Three good friends, Alan, Clement and Julian wanted to open a restaurant. Living in Sydney, they missed eating freshly made Roti Canai, sipping on frothy Teh Tarik and snacking on smoky Satay skewers. It was the food they loved from their youthful days in Kuala Lumpur. They decided to put their corporate careers on hold, pack their bags, and travel to Malaysia. Returning to Sydney, they set up a market stall at Sydney's Chinatown Night Markets. Every Friday, the guys honed in on their 'roti-flipping' and 'tea-pulling' skills, which resulted in a cult-following of people who would queue up for hours to eat their handmade Roti Canai, homemade Teh Tarik and authentic Satays. In 2007, the first restaurant opened in the heart of the Sydney CBD. Mamak, named after the roadside stalls that peddle Indian Malay street food became an instant hit with the locals. Crowds gathered, lines extended out the door and queues wrapped around the block. Today, the guys continue to be at the forefront of Malaysian cuisine. In 2014 they opened a spin-off restaurant named Hawker, specialising in Malaysian-Chinese cuisine. "Whether you're an avid fan or new to the cuisine, we warmly welcome you to our restaurants, and hope you enjoy the food as much as we do!"
