Museum in Mandurah, WA Our Museum features photographs, objects and information which reflect the progression of Mandurah from pre-settlement through its development as a quiet holiday town into the thriving city we know today! Mandurah Community Museum seeks to serve its community by being a leading local museum of social and urban history in the West Australian Regional environment. In 1986 the Historical Society established the Museum in Dalrymple's Schoolroom. They managed and maintained it until the City of Mandurah took over in 2001. Advice on issues relating to the management of the Mandurah Community Museum and its programs is presented to Council by the Museum Advisory Committee. Come and discover the fascinating stories of the Peel Region and learn about significant people and events in our local history. The museum holds information, objects and oral history recordings about the people that have played a part in making Mandurah the place it is today. Mandurah takes its name from the Noongar word Mandjoogoordap - meaning meeting place. The Mandjoogoordap Gallery, developed in association with the Indigenous Advisory Group, reflects this ancient heritage. The museum collection is housed in one location incorporating three buildings; the first government school, the courthouse and the police station.
