Skin care in Perth, WA Today's society is less tolerant of body hair than it once was, not only for women, but also increasingly for men. In days gone by, hair was important for protection against the cold and the sun, but in modern times hair in the "right" place is seen as a source of beauty, but in the "wrong" place as an annoying and unattractive impediment. People with excessive hair growth often suffer tremendously. This excess hair may be hereditary or hormonal in origin, and occasionally the cause itself can be treated. For this reason, it is important to check that you do not have a treatable cause for your problem. Your doctor will be able to check this with an examination and if necessary, blood tests. How does laser & IPL hair removal treatment work? Laser and IPL hair removal treatments work by targeting the follicles or root of the growing hair. Depending on how much energy is absorbed by the follicle, this may have the following effects: 1. Slowing hair growth down. 2. Producing a finer, fairer hair. 3. Destroying the root completely. 4. Combinations of the above. A course of treatments is always required, and this may vary depending on many factors. At a minimum, 4 treatments are necessary. Most commonly, 6 to 8 are needed. In cases where strong hormonal influences are present (for example, polycystic ovarian syndrome, or in males), more than 10 is common. In addition, some desire hair growth to be completely absent, where some are happy to achieve thinner or lighter growth. In those with darker skin and lighter hair, more treatment is necessary as well.
